ONLY THIRTY MILES FROM PARIS

(By Associated Press.) London, Sept. 3.—The battle on which the fate of Paris depends continued raging today along the entire front.

The Germans are within thirty miles of Paris.

An official French announcement says the allies have fallen back toward the southwest to avoid action under unfavorable circumstances.

The left flank line runs through the Oise valley from a point northeast of Paris to Compeigne, thence through Noyon to Laferre, which is a minor fortress and evidently held by Germans. Farther east and north the allies hold their own near Laon and Reims. The right of the allies rests on the fortified Franco-German frontier.

In spite of the German advance a strange air of confidence prevails today among the allies.

Paris will soon be the pivot of operations.

The confident feeling was enhanced by confirmed Russian victories in Galicia.

A million and a half men were engaged over two hundred miles in the battle where the Russians disrupted the Austrians acting with Germans who sought to envelop the Russian forces in Poland.

The Austrians and Germans were routed when they tried to pierce the Russian center.

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria And His Heir, Grand Duke Charles.

When the Austro-Servian war began, followed so closely by the general European war, the world hardly expected that Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria-Hungary would live through it. While the early battles of the general conflict were raging the aged ruler celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday. He was in feeble health, and the prospect of thousands of his subjects being killed in battle apparently preyed on his mind. The emperor began his long reign sixty-six years ago. During that time his monarchy was often torn by internal conflicts of its diverse races. His family troubles and domestic tribulations are a part of European history. Following the double assassination of Grand Duke Frederick Ferdinand and his wife Grand Duke Charles Francis Joseph, another nephew of the emperor, became heir to the throne.
